Preparing for change

Virginia Treatment Center for Children is on the cusp of a significant transition. Our new facility will better reflect and support the type of compassionate care we provide. VTCC team members should be especially proud of their role in shaping the new space. Your input ensured that our patients and families will be more comfortable and feel more at home. And, with your feedback, we added more features and tools to help us in our day-to-day work. Following is just a small sample of your contributions — we hope everyone’s excited to see some big changes!

- Improved patient room layouts and courtyard spaces
- Finishing touches tailored to patients, such as soap dishes, toilets, trash cans and audio speakers
- More shared spaces for community presentations, lectures and trainings
- Patient rooms designed for live teaching and observation spaces for trainees
- A less disruptive emergency response system

New place, new space: color and light

The new VTCC facility was conceived from the ground up to be a welcoming and healing environment. So often, children with mental health needs feel isolated and locked away. Our new facility will help them maintain a sense of connection. Here, children and families can experience nature, even while inside. The facility will feature many windows and glass walls in both public and private spaces, letting in an abundance of natural light. It also will have comfortable, home-like furnishings and a soothing aesthetic with warm, calming colors.

The VTCC color palette

- Earth tones: relaxing, stabilizing and familiar
- Greens: sense of balance, harmony and renewal
- Turquoises: pure and fresh, soothing tension and stress
- Purples: associated with creativity and cerebral activity

Patient perspectives

My daughter, who is now 24 years old and received treatment at VTCC, just said goodbye to her psychiatrist. It was a bittersweet moment because the outpatient and inpatient care has been so great. She is still on her journey to wellness, but VTCC has provided her hope and a starting point for her way forward.

How were you involved in planning? As children’s mental health was gaining momentum, parents were paying closer attention to the state of our building. Our children deserve to be in a place that promotes healing, so together we sought the attention of the General Assembly, legislators, VCU and the health system to bring our cause to the forefront. We hosted tours, held fundraisers and spoke at events. It took a village, but it really was a labor of love for me. By the time I stepped down as chair, the funding and building designs were in place.

What does the move mean to you? I’m delighted for the children and families of Virginia, and to continue my journey with prevention, an area that hasn’t gained much traction in healthcare. We, at VTCC, are best suited to put initiatives in place to prevent mental illness, educate and raise funding, and provide good parenting support to reduce childhood mental illness. It’s a tall order, but it’s the right thing to do and it must start somewhere.
